SAMUEL NEILSON HINCKLEY

Class Committee

ROBERT WINSOR, JR.

PHILIP OVERTON MILLS

JOHN PERRY BOWDITCH

TO THE MEMBERS OF THE CLASS OF 1905:

I submit to you our first Class Report, which contains, in statistical form, the history of our class while in college, together with other material closely related to our College life. The report also contains a list of the present addresses and occupations of the members of the class so far as they are known to the Secretary. This up-to-date record may in a way justify the delay in publishing a Report which otherwise might have been issued immediately after graduation.

Class Reports have long served a useful purpose in compiling statistics about Harvard men, and they have also been one of the principal means of communication between members of a class. The value of data taken from these Reports must depend on the completeness of the statistics; and in order to have the statistics complete it is necessary that every member of the class should contribute the facts about himself. I am sorry to report that all the members have not responded to my request for such facts; and it is with regret, therefore, that I am obliged to print the Report with the records of some members omitted. I wish to thank those who have responded promptly and cheerfully to my request for information. To those who have been indifferent, I hope the value of this Report will sufficiently appeal to make them wish they had contributed actively to it. Let me urge upon you all to assist me hereafter in any way in keeping a full record of every man in the class.

I wish to thank the College office, the University Library, the College papers, the various team captains and class secretaries, for their part in helping me. I thank especially the Rev. Francis G. Peabody for his trouble and interest in preparing the Baccalaureate Sermon for the press.

Yours sincerely,

SAMUEL NEILSON HINCKLEY.

OBJECTIONS TO UNION

Outside work did not give me time to enjoy its advantages	1	I should not be able to enjoy its advantages	1
Expense	16	Living near home, had no use for it	1
Too far from room to be an advantage	1	Too poor to feel comfortable there	1
You get nothing from belonging	1	Belonged three years, but so many non-members made use of it I felt like a criminal every time I went there	1
Not putting dues on term bills	1	Too much other work	1
Ten dollars; it is not worth it	2	The service was and is abominable	1
No time for it	4	Not in right location	1
Expensive considering its accommodations	1
Dues rather high for club of its kind	1

In answer to the question, "What advantages do you think you ought to have found at Harvard which you failed to find?" the following answers were received:

The curriculum should include more courses on the develop- ment of the Americas	1
Conversation course in German	1
Should have played football	1
Easy access to stacks in Gore Hall and the privilege of obser- vation in the observatory	1
Good fellowship	1
A course in book-keeping	1
Mercantile business	1
Some one to tell what advantages to choose	1
College dormitories conducted on business principles	1
A feeling of genuine fraternity, a sincere spirit of democracy	1
A clear idea of various occupations open to a graduate told by men of experience	1
Better and modern heating and toilet apparatus in college dormitories	1
That in social life of the University money did not act as basis for admittance to membership to clubs	2
Some of the courses are too large, making instructors too me- chanical in discharging their duties	1

More social life	9
A more intimate association with the president	1
More college life	7
Closer intercourse between faculty and student body	11
Have profited least from social and religious point of view	1
More attention from a good adviser	4
Too many courses; wish I had had more time	1
Freshman advisers should give more practical advice	1
Study more	3
Unity in spirit	4
Advantage of knowing some of the students	1
Swimming pool near gymnasium	2
Common reading and living room in each dormitory	1
More English courses	1
Know older professors well	1
Debating clubs, philanthropic work, and Union membership	1
More social advantages for men without money	1
Practice in debating and public speaking	2
Greater opportunity for study and to enter athletics	2
My selection of courses should have been better, more consistent	1
Ought to have been made to work harder, by means of courses being more difficult	3
Closer connection between professors and students. More courses like History 18a and 30	1
Closer and more frequent contact with the able men under whom I have had courses	1
Entrance into college activities	1
Better chance at yard room for senior year	1
Friendship with professors	6
Ought to have got better marks	1
Strong class spirit	6
Wider acquaintance among students	6
More emphasis ought to be laid on term work, and less on examinations. Ignorant assistants ought not to have charge of elementary courses; they discourage further study along that line	1
Better religious advantages	1
Changes in the methods of various courses	1

Greater ability on part of English A instructors, and "confidence men" in some of higher courses	1
Greater contact with teachers in social way	1
Insistence upon one's doing a moderate amount of study outside examination periods	1
Advantage of closer application to study	1
"A fair field and no favor" in every branch of student activity outside of the curriculum	1

In answer to the question "What advantages do you think you ought to have found at Harvard which you have failed to find?" the following answers were received:

More time	1
Proper courses in Organic Chemistry, required in Biology instead of Inorganic courses	1
Better mechanical equipment in laboratories of Scientific School	1
Instructors who can instruct	1
Am not satisfied with assigning so much to assistants. Many have had but little experience in dealing with classes	1
I did not expect it to be so provincial. I now see it could not be otherwise	1
Should have taken more exercise	1

DEBATING

INTERCOLLEGIATE DEBATES

W. H. Davis was the only 1905 man who debated on a University Team

March 28, 1905. Harvard vs. Princeton (affirmative) (won by Princeton)

"Resolved, That the free elective system is the best available plan for the undergraduate course of study. It is understood that — 1. The free elective system is one based on the principle that each student should select for himself all his studies throughout his college course; 2. The free elective system thus defined exists even where a minor part of the studies of the Freshman year is prescribed"

BACCALAUREATE SERMON

THE OPENING DOOR

BY FRANCIS G. PEABODY

JOHN x, 7: "I am the Door."

THERE are two kinds of religion, which make their appeal to opposite sides of human life. The two religions have the same source, but they move in opposite directions, like two streams which have their springs on the same mountain but flow down different slopes to different seas. One kind of religion thinks of life as at rest; the other kind thinks of life as in motion. One is the answer to the prayer for peace; the other is the answer to the prayer for power. One is the religion of repose; the other is the religion of action. One is the religion of age; the other of youth. According to one, Jesus says: "Come unto me all ye that labor, and I will give you rest"; according to the other, he says: "If any man will come after me, let him take up his cross and follow." According to one, the great word of the New Testament is the saying: "I am the Truth"; according to the other, the most persuasive message of Jesus is the saying: "I am the Door." Both of these ways of religion are real. What many a tired life desires is rest after pain, relief from care, a place of safety from the troubles of the world; and to such a life the peaceful security of a Christian faith opens like a quiet harbor of refuge after anxious days of tossing storm. But there are many lives which do not crave this sense of security. On the contrary, the desire to retreat from life, the anxious search for a harbor, is precisely what makes religion seem to many healthy, happy lives uninteresting and remote, — appropriate for the weak, the discouraged, or the dying, but not for the young, the strong, and the brave. What their lives want is not rest, but motion; not idleness, but usefulness; not a harbor of refuge, but the large adventures of the open sea. You watch a battered wreck as it is towed into the harbor, and you say, "Take her to some safe dock, and moor her where no storm can come, for she is too weather-beaten to leave port;" but when you see a well-built vessel standing out into the bay you say, "There goes a craft which can laugh at storms; her mission is not to rest, but to move; her captain asks, not a dock to lie in, but a course to steer and a port to reach some day." It is a picture of the undiscouraged, expectant, normal human life, not yet resigned to the religion of age, but asking further guidance into the unexplored, the unrevealed, the perilous yet beckoning Unknown. To such a life comes this promise, more than once repeated, and issuing from the last hours of the life of Jesus: "I am the Door. Through me men enter into their larger life. I am the Way. I give the course to steer. I open the gate of opportunity. My gospel is not one of peace alone, but one of progress and power." This is the aspect of the teaching of Jesus to which we turn to-day. It is not the whole Gospel. It is not the message of religion to the tired, the aged, the sinners, or the mourners: but it is the answer to the wholesome, natural desire of many an eager, questioning, restless, unsatisfied, hesitating, self-distrustful, youthful life.

"I am the Door!" It is curious to see how often the progress of life through the successive incidents of experience is like the passing from one room to another of some ample house through a succession of opening doors. You enter one room and the door closes behind you, and there seems no way out; but while you seem thus shut in, another door unexpectedly opens before you, and you go on into a larger room beyond. This, for instance, is the story of each step in education. A child is shut in among the first principles of his task, and it seems to him a narrow, restricted, penal experience, from which he longs to be set free. What are these tiresome rules of grammar, he asks, these exercises of composition, these preposterous problems of rooms to paper and cord-wood to measure, but parts of a prison discipline ingeniously devised to repress the spirits of a healthy boy? Is it not all, as one child said of learning the alphabet, going through a great deal to get very little? Then, in some happy hour, under the touch of some real teacher, or through the inspiration of some book or thought or friend, these abstractions of education become transformed into realities. A door opens from this unmeaning discipline into significance, mastery, progress; and the child looks through that door into the larger room of usefulness, accuracy, science, insight, joy, to which the antechamber of these unwelcome tasks is now seen to be the only way.

The same story may be told of the higher education. A youth passes from the compulsion of the schoolroom to the liberty of the university, and there confronts him the bewildering problem of the choice of studies. The vast diversity of the elective system lies before him with its confusing abundance, and he is bewildered by the sudden expansion of his intellectual life. When, however, he considers more seriously the problem of choice, this sense of liberty is changed into a new sense of limitation. What is this increase of freedom but a new form of compulsion? Liberty to choose many subjects means necessity to choose a few. Here and there in the world of scholarship are regions which he may enter, but there remains many an alluring field of study which he cannot hope to explore. Many a door must be left unopened, and many another passed barely beyond the threshold, if he would advance with any confidence into his special pursuit. What a shut-in experience, then, the liberty of the modern scholar comes to be! What has become of that earlier tradition of a symmetrical culture which marked the gentleman of two generations ago, — the education which could embellish talk with quotations from the classics, which knew something of many things instead of everything of something of which no one else knew even the name? How narrow seems the field, — say rather, the rut, — of the modern student; and with what a sigh he abandons the earlier ideal of a comprehensive culture under the compulsion of a specialized world! What is it, then, which can restore self-respect to modern scholarship? It is the discovery that this world of spacious learning, this sense of amplitude and liberty, which seems at first shut out by the specialization of studies, is to be reached in no other way than through the narrow entrance of specialized work. The door, indeed, shuts behind one, as he turns to his chosen task, and shuts out many delightful undertakings which he abandons with regret. Concentration of attention becomes the stern law of success; but of a sudden, out of the narrow room which he has entered, at some unanticipated point, like a secret passage in a solid rock, another door opens, out of limitation into enlargement, out of facts into principles, and the student discovers that the task which seemed restrictive is in fact the essential preliminary of insight, wisdom, and power. First the narrow passage of specialized mastery, then the opening door into the general law, the glimpse of the larger truth, the step into mastery,—that is the way which the modern scholar has to go.

The same experience meets one in more dramatic fashion as he goes his further way into the world. A young man leaves college and looks about him in life for a work which is worth his doing and which he is fit to do, and the first impression which confronts him is of limitation and restriction; the doubt whether there be any room left for such as he, the lack of any outlook toward a large, full, human kind of life. It is not that he demands much of the world. All he asks is what he calls an "opening." "Give me but a chance," he says, "and I will take my chances." But the world's work shuts him in between the walls of some confining task, and with a sense of hopelessness he surrenders himself to its inevitable routine and detail, as though the one thing he could not have was the "opening" he desires. He will not shirk even repressive obligations; he will try to believe in the dignity of labor, even when that labor is mechanical, insignificant, and dull; but at the end of the day it is as though the silent figure of Life stood with its back against the door which leads to larger service, holding him off as he would force it open; and he cries out: "Is this shut-in space all the room I am to have, and this meagre opportunity the end to which my conscientious service leads? Oh, Life, that seems to mock me with thy silence, give me my chance! Open the close-shut door!" Then, one day, in a manner altogether unanticipated and incalculable, this man's chance arrives! The door opens, sometimes in quite another place from that which seems the opening he desires,—not where the door seemed to be, but where the wall seemed blank and impenetrable; and the young man is called into the larger room, of which his restricted duty was the essential vestibule, and his fidelity to that duty the only key. You do the shut-in task and it opens into the larger opportunity; you face the limited duty and the larger duty discloses itself just beyond. The door beyond opens only as the door behind is shut. Straight is the gate and narrow is the way which leads to life. To him that is faithful in that which is least, that which is much is revealed! That is what makes life so rich, so surprising, so romantic,—that the little that is known is the gate of the greater unknown, and the little that one does makes it possible to do more. Sometimes these antechambers of experience are mysterious and dark; and duty, sacrifice, sickness, close round one's chances of enlargement like prison-cells which shut in nearer and nearer as though they were to crush one to death. But this is the miracle of many a shut-in experience,—that in the black, hard wall as it approaches, there appears, first, a tiny beam of light, then a view beyond it to peace and hope, and then at last an open door, through which one sees as never before the meaning of life and passes into a use of life to which nothing but that dark approach could have disclosed the way.

Such is the story of multitudes of lives — the surprising and miraculous story of life's opening doors. But now, suppose one sums up all these scattered incidents of experience, and thinks of the whole of life as thus consciously led from room to room, to richer gifts of opportunity and liberty, of duty and of beauty, what is this way of life which opens thus from door to door? Why, this is nothing else than religion; or more accurately, this is the first gift of the religion of Jesus Christ to the life of a young man in the modern world. It is often fancied that the religious life is a narrowing, restrictive, disciplinary experience. You give up things, you deny yourself, you are shut in by pledges, by creeds, by priests; and then you are a Christian. Renunciation, "Entsagen," as Carlyle said, becomes the great word of faith. The religious life, under such a definition, is not a thing in motion, but at rest; not a form of progress, but a way of peace. No greater mistake can be made about religion than to reduce it to this negative, ascetic, monastic state of mind. Submission, self-denial, resignation, are indeed asked of every man some day; but the first appeal of the religion of Jesus Christ to normal and healthy youth is to the sense of power, initiative, action, and desire. It asks, first of all, not denial but affirmation; not renunciation but acceptance; not a retreat but an advance. "I am come," says Jesus, "that they may have life and may have it abundantly." "I am not come to destroy, but to fulfil." It is not a soft and easy world which is thus offered, with no burdens to be borne. "Take up thy cross," says Jesus, "and follow!" But even this is a demand, not for resignation—as though one lay limp and helpless before the cross of Christ—but for strength to take up one's cross like a man and follow, even though stumblingly, where the way of the cross must go. The purpose of Jesus Christ is not to efface personality, but to discover personality; not to save people out of the world, but to make people fit to save the world. "Where the spirit of the Lord is, there is liberty." "All things are yours." "I am the Way." These are the great commands which reverberate through the New Testament—words of growth, enlargement, progress, power. Other aspects of the teaching of Jesus make their appeal to other moods, as one enters deeper among the experiences of life; but the first word that meets the shut-in, hesitating, self-distrustful life, is the summons of Jesus to go forward: "I am the Door."

And how is it, one goes to ask, that religion thus opens the doors of life? It does so, we must answer, in two ways: first by giving a new meaning to the world, and then by giving a new meaning to one's own life. It opens the door, that is to say, first into a larger universe, and then into a deeper self. On the one hand are the great number of thoughtful people who are bewildered by the mystery of an uninterpreted world. Here is this ceaseless whirl of material forces in which we are involved; this tragic struggle for physical existence, these brutal competitions of the industrial world, this brief, vain incident of personal life, with its little joys and sorrows, its ambitions and dreams, lifting themselves like a bright wave upon the ocean and in a moment sinking back into the depth; and the cry comes from many a heart: What does all this mean? Has it any meaning? Is it, as some learned people tell us, a hollow, empty, delusive world, a tale told by an idiot, full of sound and fury, signifying nothing? Is it but a sport of the Eternal, where we are “Impotent pieces of the game he plays,

Upon this checker-board of nights and days.
Hither and thither moves and checks and slays,
And one by one back in the cupboard lays?”

What is it that gives meaning to the world and sets one in a rational universe of unity and purpose instead of chaos and despair? It is the view which opens through the door of religion. Much there may be in the order of the universe which still remains baffling and mysterious, much postponement of knowledge in God's education of the human race. But what a step is taken toward sanity and self-control and peace of mind, when one looks upon the world as the scene of a spiritual intention and desire which give to its perplexing incidents their unity and worth! It is as though the high stone wall which bounds the physical world opened into a gateway and one looked through to a path of sunlight and flowers. It may be one's part to stay and work and suffer between the walls of life, but it is easier to work and possible to bear, if one can hold the gate a little open, and keep the vista clear from the shadow to the sunshine, from the tasks of life to the vision of God.

And if this is true of one's view of the world, it is much more true of one's knowledge of himself. For one person that has come to doubt the meaning of the universe a hundred have come to doubt the meaning of their own lives. How meagre, how superficial, how purposeless, is the petty experience within which one seems inevitably bound! How insignificant is its scope, how unimportant its consequences! Why strive and agonize, why hope and scheme, as though one were accomplishing and progressing and arriving, when in fact one is but the horse that turns the treadmill, whipped to his task in the machine, but tied all day in the little pen that never moves. It is this sense of insignificance and impotency which robs a man of his faith and hope. It is sometimes said that young men in our day think too much of themselves; and it would certainly be an exaggeration to affirm that the typical modern youth deserves the beatitude pronounced upon the poor in spirit. Yet the chief moral danger of such young lives does not lie, as many persons think, in their self-conceit, but in their self-distrust; not in thinking too much of themselves, but in thinking too little of themselves. What they need is not so much "taking down," as lifting up, not so much a new self-reproach, as a new self-respect. To think too much of oneself may be a form of intoxication, but to think too little of oneself is a form of paralysis. To live in a shut-in universe is a philosophical misfortune; but to live in a shut-in soul is a moral tragedy. And what is it lets one out from this sense of limitation and defeat? It is the sense of association with the purposes of God, the recognition of one's life as a part of the Divine plan, the response of the child to the call of the Father. You are not alone, because the Father is with you; you are not helpless, because beneath you are the Everlasting Arms; you are not a failure, because you are a laborer together with God; and an unexpected sense of capacity and effectiveness is kindled as you commit yourself to a service which is not your own. You come to yourself and say: "I will go to my Father." That is the best gift of religion—the gift to the individual soul of faith in itself. And what is this but the opening of a door—not outward into the larger world, but inward into the deeper self—so that one passes into an interior life of tranquillity, serenity, and praise. The religious life is like those Egyptian temples, which in their outer courts looked through great free vistas to the fertile fields and the deep blue sky; but as the worshipper sought the central shrine, door after door swung open into interior rooms, until at last in a hush of solitude which no sound could penetrate and no fellow-worshipper could share, the single life bowed in the central sanctuary where it found its God.

Such then is the first message of religion to an eager, forward-looking, undiscouraged, modern life,—the message of expansion, liberty, spaciousness, horizon, hope. Sometimes a man asks what religion can do for him in so busy and real a world. It does not answer all our problems, or free us from our cares, or abolish our sorrows, or insure us against risk. Of what use, then, is religion, if it is not authoritative, conclusive, remedial,—a rest for the saints? To such questions concerning the meaning of life Jesus, on the last day of his life, answers: "I am the Door." The normal, healthy, expectant life hears the summons to go forward and welcomes the guide who opens the door. What is it to live, but to pass from room to room of the great house of experience and to find each successive room more ample and satisfying? What can one ask of life, but just a chance to enter the larger world and to know the hidden self? What is the great mistake of life? It is to pause in the antechambers of experience and never know how spacious life may be. And when, from room to room, one's life has been led on and at last finds before it that final wall which we call death, what is it to die, but once more to have the wall open before one's wondering and expectant eyes, and to hear the same voice that has led one through the doors of life, say:—"Let not your heart be troubled. In my Father's house are many mansions. I am the Door!"

My fellow students of the graduating class, I stand with you to-day before the door which now swings open, from study to work, from books to life, from the college to the world, and I watch you as you go your way through the open door. The limited, narrow, academic, antechamber opens into the diversity and complexity, the business and pleasure, the joy and pain of large experience; and you step with light hearts across the threshold into the spaciousness beyond. What do I see awaiting you in these larger rooms? Vicissitudes and disappointments, burdens and cares, temptations of hardness and temptations of softness, temptation to stop and temptation to turn back;—all these are there; and no true friend would hide them from your eyes. But this is my prayer for you, in the name of the college, and in the name of God,—that the life you have led here together may make you ready to enter the life that waits beyond the open door. Each truth discovered here, each master followed, each duty done, each dream of service, each friend by whose side you walk to-day, steadies your steps across the threshold. On one of our gates, built in memory of a Harvard man, you read as you go in: "Enter to grow in wisdom"; and as you go out: "Depart to serve thy country and thy kind." It is a gate that is always open, and it swings easily both ways. It is the symbol of your coming and your going among us here. You have entered to grow in wisdom; now depart, to serve better your country and your kind. As you entered college there met you in this chapel the great words of the Master: "Come unto me; I am the Truth; the truth shall make you free;" and now, as you go out, the same Master says: "If any man would come after me let him take up his cross and follow." "I am the Door." And so, from room to room of experience, from door to door of life, may you go bravely on, led by the Master's voice, and followed by many a loving prayer from those who linger here, until at last the final prophecy is fulfilled, and a Door is opened in heaven and a voice says to you, "Come up higher, and I will show you the things which shall come to pass"; and, through the antechamber of this world you come into the presence-chamber itself; and through the silence you hear, I pray God, the welcome of the King: "Well done, good and faithful servant; thou hast been faithful over a few things, I will make thee ruler over many things; enter into the joy of thy Lord."

THE BACCALAUREATE HYMN

ORIC BATES

O LORD, Thou who in years gone by hast seen
Thy children heedless of Thy changeless right,
We know how endless have Thy mercies been
To us who have by Thee been helped to light.

To-day with hearts contrite we turn to Thee,
Beseeching that Thou guard us as of old,
That as of yore Thy staying hand shall be Patient to guide us gently to Thy fold.

Not on us all shall glory set her crown,
Nor shall we all win praise from lips of men,
But such of us as in the fight go down,
Make strong our spirits that we rise again.

CLASS DAY EXERCISES

JUNE 23, 1905

CLASS ORATION

BY HAROLD SIMPSON DEMING

LADIES AND GENTLEMEN AND CLASSMATES: As we are gathered here together on the day which above all other days is ours, the pleasurable stir of the occasion cannot altogether dispel our sense of regret at the approaching severance of ties to which four brief years, at Harvard, may give the strength of a lifetime. But sorrow at parting must yield place to deep gratitude for the rich experience which has been ours, for the abundant opportunities which we have been free to improve. Advantages such as come to few men have been ours.

At Harvard our individual development has been in every way encouraged. Here is no inflexible curriculum of study, disregarding the peculiar aptitudes of different men. No effort is made, at Harvard, to cast men in a common mould. And in activities other than study each man among us has found opportunity to give his best energy full play in the development of his individual abilities. Freedom of thought and of action is nowhere in the world more real. And with the disappearance of some of the old barriers between class and class, undergraduates are more free than ever to choose their intimate associates among the men whose temperaments and interests accord with theirs. The man who cares for journalism finds others to pursue it with him; he who as a recreation would sharpen his wits in debate does not have long to look for opponents; even the searcher after birds and bees finds companions to join him in his "natural history walks"; in whatever a man may be interested, in whatever he may be skilled, he will find at Harvard groups of men in which there are those more skilled, more interested than he, who by their competition will spur him to his greatest efforts in self-development.

Because within a place so large as Harvard these various groups of men are in some degree independent of each other, and because they often widely differ in their lesser interests, it has sometimes happened that Harvard men, in their undergraduate days, seemed disunited, divided into groups not only separated but antagonistic.

Yet each class, as it nears the day of parting from Harvard, discovers that these scores of men, each with his individuality made firmer by competition with his fellows, draw more and more closely together in the consciousness of a common purpose; these varied groups, apparently so widely parted, mingle in the truest democracy,—a democracy in which the highest reward to the individual is the respect which his achievements, and, most of all, his character, have won from his fellows. And each class passes out from the gates of Harvard a unit, firmly bound together in the determination to carry the principles of its college democracy into the larger democracy beyond.

Not all of us have been conscious of the potent change which our years at Harvard have wrought in our characters. But consciously or unconsciously we have changed. The change has not come alone through study. Our leisure hours have been full of it,—and our leisure hours have been many. We have had time to pause, to get, through an acquaintance with the lives of strong men, living and dead, a breadth of view, a sense of perspective,—to draw, from the very stones of these old buildings, the selfsame inspiration to deep, earnest thinking that thousands of others have drawn before us. Quietly, almost unnoticed, the ceaseless influence of Harvard has bred in us, as in our fathers before us, a firm reverence for sobriety of thought, tolerance, and truth. The hurry of a humdrum struggle for existence has not oppressed us. In our comradeship with one another we have had no need for a thought of material advantage. We have not felt the necessity of associating with this man or with that man because he could advance us in a business way. We have not felt restrained from comradeship with men who could in no worldly way benefit us. We have mingled in a democracy of friendship, where admiration for a man's achievements quickens respect for his qualities, and where affection and friendship fairly tread on the heels of respect. The capacity for unselfish friendship has grown up within us,—friendship springing unbidden from the sympathies which like temperaments or purposes engender among men whose hearts are free to receive them. But for our years, at Harvard that capacity might never have been ours; it is a capacity which may do much to make endurable a life of strenuous endeavor.

In mental power we have gained. Day by day and year by year the drill of the classroom and the study has done its work. The ability to concentrate the whole mind upon an exacting task, the capacity for self-discipline in continuous, purposeful labor, the habit of discrimination in the use of facts and theories, a self-reliant judgment,—these a college training may bring to him who seizes on his opportunities. In greater or less degree each man who comes to Harvard responds to these opportunities. Few indeed are those who leave her without increased intellectual efficiency as the reward of their response.

Surely our college years, with their comradeship and their competitive endeavor, have moulded us into stronger, nobler men; building up our mental powers, filling our hearts with quiet courage, steeling our wills to endure years of vigorous labor. We have been privileged men. Relatively few men by virtue of their previous opportunities begin their life-tasks highly equipped for the struggle that lies before them. We are among those chosen few.

With the thought of what our years at Harvard have done for us fresh in our minds, what shall be our attitude toward the larger life we have not yet begun? There is danger, in an environment replete with opportunities for gaining intellectual power, that we should come to regard as our natural birthright the rare advantages we have here enjoyed. We may feel that our training belongs to us alone, that our mental equipment is to be used solely as a means for personal aggrandizement, an instrument for the winning of material acquisitions. But opportunities such as ours have been, and the increased power which they may bring, come to no man as of natural right. Rather are those opportunities and that power in the nature of a trust, confided to us by the Commonwealth, — a trust the responsibility for whose just discharge can scarcely be exaggerated. The man whose previous training, — whether got in college, or in the rough school of the world, — has made him a man of greater wit, of more varied resource, of keener judgment, of greater endurance than the man whose opportunities or natural gifts have been less, owes, as a sacred duty, part of his time and strength to the service of the Commonwealth.

The path of that service lies clear before us. We come of a people who for hundreds of years have struggled after democratic ideals in government. In our own country to-day those ideals are by no means yet fully realized. The struggle of the people to have their deliberately expressed will put in operation in the conduct of the governments, local and national, which they have created, — the struggle of the centuries, — has never ceased. Little by little the people have made advance against autocratic power; but the fight must go steadily on.

There is need of every able-minded citizen in the fight. Young men desire, and not unjustly, that their years of mental preparation and later labor may be rewarded by personal success. Too often they have regarded little else. In the mighty battle to subdue the land and its resources to the purposes of industrial expansion, the American people have sometimes elevated material achievements to a plane too high. They have been so engrossed in private enterprise that the public welfare has found rather small place in their thoughts. The ordinary American citizen has been apathetic about his government. So long as the operations of government have not interfered with his private undertakings, he has not greatly concerned himself with the more far-reaching results of political changes and tendencies. "Public-spirited endeavor" has too often been, for him, synonymous with "meddlesome agitation."

The reason for this attitude is not far to seek. Within the past forty years our civilization has sprung into a complexity before undreamed of. Developments in the industrial world have been stupendous. Through all the countless ramifications of business enterprise has run the current of American ingenuity and American organizing power. More than by anything else this great growth in our material prosperity has been characterized by the division and subdivision of labor. We live in an age of specialists. And to-day this is as true in government as in business. In the rush of modern life few men find time or energy for mastering the details of any occupation other than that by which they earn their livelihood. The task of operating the government of city, state, or nation is left to the man who makes it his business; the machinery of politics has been too complicated for the ordinary, hurried citizen to understand. More and more that machinery has been handled by specialists in political management. And the more complicated the machinery has grown, the surer has become the specialist's control.

The power depending upon this political control has been abused. The specialist in political management has become an autocrat, dictating to his underlings like a feudal lord, asserting his will not for the people's good, but for his own gain. Under the forms of free and democratic government he has perverted that government to private ends. It accomplishes little to inveigh against him. Small results follow the "higher criticism" of government in the United States. There is need of intense, vigorous, intelligent action on the part of every citizen. If the power of the political autocrat is to be destroyed, if his grip on the people is to be broken, some portion at least of the business of governing must be taken from his hands. The apathy of the private citizen toward his government must be dispelled. He must be convinced that he has a part in the government, and be induced to perform it. Major Higginson said recently to a gathering of our Class: "It is the duty of every one of us to help make this government of ours just as good a government as we can." That lesson must come home to us.

Of recent years it has been the well-trained, busy private citizen who has led in the fight for political betterment. It was he who created and educated the public opinion, the public intelligence, which demanded, and secured, ballot-reform, an honest registry of voters, an effective civil service law. It is the well-trained private citizen who in the future may make the fight of the people against undemocratic, autocratic influences in the government a winning fight. Not because we are college men, but because we are citizens, we owe it to our country to take part in this struggle. Nevertheless, as Harvard men, our intellectual training should make us more effective citizens than we otherwise should be. Though men who have not had advantages like ours may surpass us in effective service in the cause of democratic government, we should dearly grudge them the honor.

Before many days have passed we shall be scattered far and wide. But wherever we live in this broad republic we shall encounter different phases of this same great struggle between the forces that make for autocratic rule against the will of the people and the forces that make for a government truly democratic, in which the will of the people, deliberately expressed, is honestly exercised by their chosen representatives. Let us strive mightily after personal success in our business or professions ; but let us not forget, wherever we live, the service we owe the cause of democracy.

A hundred years and more ago our fathers died that true ideals of government might be perpetuated. In this familiar hall are ranged the quiet tablets witnessing the unhesitating devotion of Harvard men who died that those same true ideals might not be destroyed. The call has not come to us that we should die for those ideals ; but we have need of a courage akin to theirs, so to live, that under a government free in truth as in name our college and our country may prosper.

CLASS POEM

BY SWINBURNE HALE

To-DAY the laurels are forgot
That labor and the high emprise
Of these full years have won.
To-day we turn our eyes
Forward, though dim with hope and fear
The long road seems that leads to the far light,
And "Strength, man, strength!" we call to those most near.

The triumphs and the pomp are done ;
The long, sad hours where failure sat
Are faded, too, into the moonlit night :
Thank God for both ! there is no truth but that
Found in the making of a soul
By each of us in turn, — save by the star
Of his own soul's light overhead
No man was ever led, nor can be led.
And life may be a struggle and a war,
Or a long peace, or anything that you
Or I may wish to call it, still —
Give to your God his due —
Your God, I say, whatever he may be —
And to the devil his — your devil too —
And you shall find truth crown you at the goal.

The teacher and the poet shall speak,
The worker through the day be dumb,
Yet what shall teacher, poet, and all the horde
Of seers avail to mould the worker's will ?
He only, he alone, knows how to see

His own light; he alone knows where to seek
The haven whither he would come,
And only he can worship his own Lord.

Yet even if he knows not where and how,
But gropes and blunders vaguely in the night,
Still he is master of his lot,
Still he can feel a sense of godliness
Flow through him and endow
Even a deep distress
With something that is more than sight, —
He cannot say that God forgot! —
The search for truth in life is more than life,
The doubt is more than life, the seeming stain
Of failure is oft-times a true success,
And joy is kin to pain.

Man's life, being perfect, might be less than nought;
But being what he is, he need not soon
Forego the aspiration, the great boon
God gave him at his birth — still to endure
In splendid hope of truth, however far
The truth may seem, however strange
May seem earth's mysteries.
The hope at least is sure,
The gleam is always with us, though our star
May sometimes be obscured and lost to sight.

To each man his own star! to each his gleam!
To each his own advancing light!
For while the seasons change
And moons uprise and set, and rise again,
Men, quite apart, work out their destinies
In various progress and unceasing change.
Nothing abides save Nature, — even she Searches fulfilment for herself and strives
To find a cleansing of her stain.
And we, though in our lives

We seem but many question marks and slurs
Writ on earth's surface, we shall understand
At last the meaning of the dim, long road,
Where perilous places strengthened as we trod.
And what, — though man demurs
To know his imperfection, — what shall he
Find that is nobler than to strive to be
More near perfection — reaching high
Till even his own soul's star seems almost nigh
Unto his outstretched hand,
Raising himself and raising, too, his God.

IVY ORATION

BY WHITCOMB FIELD

FRIENDS, NEWLY DISCOVERED RELATIVES, CLASSMATES:—
The ivy orator is no longer permitted in Sanders Theatre to share with you his great sorrow. The Class Day speakers have finally rebelled at the abuse and ridicule which ivy orators have heaped upon them since time in Memorial. The class orator wished his flowing periods unimpeded, the poet demanded a loftier atmosphere in which to lisp his numbers, the odist found the same necessity for his conventional display of intellectual emotion. And so they have thrown the ivy orator out—way out. They have said, “We will be revenged; let us drive him away to some lonely spot; and there let him shout if he wants to.”

Yet for the ivy orator there is one consolation—for you there is one great advantage—the Stadium is safe, it is fire-proof; it is separated by a long, dry road and a flowing stream from the inflammable buildings in the Yard.

If you have seen the Cambridge Fire Department inaction you will appreciate the peril of a fire in the Yard. Only those who have watched the firemen rushing helplessly about amid clouds of smoke and the crash of falling glass, will realize how much the Fire Department is like some patent medicines,—slow to work, but guaranteed to destroy every pane. It should be realized that it is due to the efforts of 1905 that Yard rooms have become such a burning question. Here, then, you are freed from all fear of conflagration. In the Yard there is danger, however abstract; in the Stadium you will find safety in the concrete.

But as we look into the future, no farther in fact than next November, we notice that the Stadium is not always going to prove so safe a place for every one. This mammoth edifice, if not full grown, will be far enough advanced for dedication, not in the form of a christening, but by a burial. The undertaker has come all the way from the Pacific slope to have charge of these obsequies, with which former experience has already made him familiar. Nineteen hundred and five is proud to lend its captain another year to be a director of ceremonies, and when the deceased has been laid low we may truly say that Yale is paved with good intentions.

Enough for the future. The past of nineteen hundred and five needs no one to extol its many virtues. Nor could mortal pen or tongue be adequate to such a task. To convince the graduates here to-day of the absolute superiority of 1905 would be inhospitable; to convince the Juniors of it would be impossible.

Our orator has presented to you this morning much that is no doubt serious and lofty; our inspired poet and odist have dwelt on our aspirations and ideals. What we are going to dwell on, now that our four years and our allowances are spent, is a question that to-day we are trying to forget. Accordingly, to adopt the words of an immortal poet, you had rather have a fool to make you merry than experience to make you sad.

Yet experience has taught us a great deal. We have learned, in spite of the teachings of the Political Club to the contrary, that at Harvard it is better that a man should seek the office, than that the office should seek the man. Yet few would be here to-day had not the office sought us and insisted that a dull wit, like a dull tool, can gain more by grinding than a sharp one can by cutting.

We have grown to suspect the exact identity and composition of the Administrative Board. To begin with, it is something the undergraduate is never permitted to look upon; it sits apart in awful mystery; it is like an undeveloped kodak film: something that will not bear the light. Then why not expose it! It must be an oracle to which the Dean carries all our troubles for solution. For no single body since the Delphic oracle has settled so many questions or foretold so many fates as this Board can do on a single Monday evening. We have cause to doubt even the existence of such an oracular body. For we are sure that the Dean does not believe in omens, when he refuses even to let us keep our signs.

We have learned that when a special guardian of the peace is given a beat on Mt. Auburn Street, it is not to protect the property there, but to detect the impropriety. Those who have read the Dean's report will understand why Mt. Auburn Street is officially known as "the gold coast." It is a location where great wealth and much sickness abound. And it might be added as a warning to future classes, that sickness on the part of any inhabitant of the "gold coast" never fails to arouse the suspicions of the medical visitor. Who has not seen him speeding toward Claverly or Russell in his high power motor car! With what promptness he hastens to our relief! But do not be misled; his anxiety is not whether he can make us well, but whether he will find us ill. We have found, moreover, that there is less danger in the millions of pills of the medical visitor than there is in one tablet of the medical faculty.

All this experience has taught us. Such an accumulation of wisdom has been made possible only by the fact that as individuals we have striven hard, and that as a class we have stood together. We early saw that to succeed we must unite, and for this reason 1905 was the first Freshman class that ever joined the Union.

From that moment the history of 1905 has been a history of reform. Evil traditions which Harvard in the past has formed or cherished, under the guidance of 1905 have either reformed or perished. For instance, in our Sophomore rush we wrought such havoc in the ranks of 1906 that the next year 1906 entreated and finally persuaded 1907 to forego this unhallowed pastime. Encouraged by our success we sought to reform a far greater menace. Success again crowned our efforts. We reformed Memorial. Where once we paid four dollars a week and lived partly on extra orders, we now pay but two and one-half dollars a week and live entirely on extra orders. Think of it! Reform had now become rampant. Nineteen hundred and five rejuvenated the Harvard Monthly, and proceeded to reform the whole of college life. The infection spread, and while the Monthly refused to countenance the policy of undergraduate clubs, the Crimson refused to advertise their elections. Reform carried all before it, until even the college office caught the fever. It then not only forbade men to enter too many sports, but it no longer counted for a degree courses in which too many sports were entered. As a result Geology 4, as a great popular course, is now but an idle memory of the past. The same thing may be said of at least one course in frenzied Fine Arts. And Music 3 has been made more difficult in order to discourage the sale of all printed notes. With these gone, where is our opportunity to cultivate a noble leisure? Student life at Harvard promised to become a stern reality, or in the words of our noble Dean, "We must look upon our college exercises as business engagements." Let the thrifty student remember that, on the basis of six courses and one hundred and fifty dollars tuition, every time he cuts a lecture he loses exactly twenty-four and four-fifths cents' worth of instruction.

But to return. We watched with apprehension to see what policy the college would next offer to adopt. Our worst fears were realized. Reform outstripped itself. Harvard offered to adopt the Institute of Technology.

The problem involved in the Tech merger is much like that of the Class Day Ivy. It is something which is very little understood; it is something which we wish we could laugh at. Yet the ivy differs from the merger in one respect: it may possibly offer some advantage to some one. It will have some justification if it can dispel the impression received this morning in Sanders Theatre, that there is nothing in our lives at Harvard which is not melancholy.

Enough said. If from sitting so long on such hard and uncomfortable seats you feel cramped or confined, come up to the Yard and watch us spread. But when you partake of our spreads remember that "enough is as good as a feast," and that digestion is the better part of salad.

ODE

BY JOHN HOWLAND LATHROP

GREAT mother of men, who through seasons dost give
 To the world, from thine elm-shaded green,
Generations of hearts that are heart of thyself
 Which fulfil what thy vision hath seen.
Thou hast wrought through thy sons the Messiah's own task ;
 They have shown the oppressor his shame.
It was thine inspiration that fitted this land
 To bear opportunity's name.

'Neath thy breast, we the sons of these late happy years
 Have drunk deep of thy spirit and power,
And the streams of thy life-blood that flow in our veins
 Shall give strength in necessity's hour.
The pain that we feel as thou givest us birth
 Is thine anguish, which naught can destroy
Save the thought of thy country enriched with thine heirs,
 Which transfigures thy sorrow with joy.

LATIN ORATION

DE AMICITIA SEMPER CONSERVANDA

BY ROYAL ARCHIBALD MOORE

ANIMIS linguisque favete !

Vos omnes quicumque hoc in theatro adsidetis dum gradus academicos nostros accipimus, fautores nostrae laudis benigni, salvere iubeo.

Te primum, O praeses noster inlustrissime, ex animo ipso salutem plurimam dico, qui per tot iam annos hanc universitatem tam bene, tam sapienter gubernes, qui non modo pro alumniis tuis ut pater praesens summa diligentia, summo amore consulas, sed etiam illos cures qui, manibus intentes, vitam agunt laboriosam. Tantis pro officiis tuis amoris, tanta pro sollicitudine et nostrum et illorum gratias laudesque tibi meritas una voce semper tribuemus.

Et tu quoque, rei publicae decus et exemplum splendidum honestatis iustitiaeque in civitate gerenda, quod iam quinque et viginti annos nostrae universitatis alumnus matrem tuam almam revises, gratulationem accipe sinceram. Firma cum manu quasi gubernator clavum civitatis tenens, ut in praeterito sic in futuro tempore strenue pergas, hominibus malis terror et feris montivagis.

Te quoque, qui gubernator hanc civitatem Massachusettensem summa iustitia consilioque bono regis, una voce nunc salvere iubemus. Semper ut exemplum probitatis inter cives nostros exstes, pro oculis omnium civis Americanus optimus.

Et vos, socii et inspectores, quorum opera generosa universitas ad hanc tantam prosperitatem pervenit, consaluto.

Nec vos, professores et praeceptores nostri, praeteribo. Nos enim docuistis per hos anno quattuor quidquid boni, quidquid pulchri et honesti ex temporibus iam actis rerum experientia sit probatum. Vobis omnibus gratias summas agimus. Quae vero magistri nobis mandavistis aliis nunc tradere pro viribus conabimur. Ardua fuit interdum via doctrinae, vestrum autem auxilium semper aderat, et in vita nostra iam incipiente speramus vos semper, ut aute sic futuros esse amicos.

Et vos, matres benignae (et patres, si quidem adestis), ad haec sollemnia concelebranda praesentes, amicis ut semper animis adeste ac fortuna nostra gaudete.

Quid! Vosne neglexi, puellae forma specieque tam lepidissimae, cum ornamenta tum deliciae nostrae? Di prohibeant! Vos omnes universo complexu complector — verbis sane, non factis — et consaluto. Semper nobis eritis causa virtutis, causa laboris iucundissima. Salvere igitur, gaudere laetari iubeo, sed valete numquam libenter dicam.

Diversum autem et tristius mandatum vobis habeo, O sodales carissimi, sed aliqua cum laetitia fortasse commixtum. Nunc enim inter homines laborare necesse est, ex hac die humanis in rebus versari. Nunc igitur sibi quisque dicere debet, "Homo sum; humani nihil a me alienum puto." Suam quisque habet viam, suum quisque habet opus suscipiendum, sed inter labores nostros societatem, amicitiam nostram mutuam omnino dissolvere haud necesse videtur. Nam signo quodam manifesto distinguimur, quod semper manebit pro oculis nostris facile videndum, ut inter nos ubique recognoscamus. Et cum iam in vias tam diversas in eo simus ut ingrediamur, meminisse oportet nos omnes unius quasi matris alumnos esse. Itaque amicitia coniuncti, ubique amore huius nostrae universitatis firme consociati cum prudentia et diligentia, et publice et private nos geramus, ut alius alio et omnes amicitia nostra digni probemur.

DISQUISITIONS

A MISUNDERSTOOD PARTY

BY EDWARD EAGLE BROWN

THE Conservative party of the United Kingdom is much misunderstood in this country. A considerable section of the American people look upon it as an unprogressive and reactionary party, inimical to Ireland, jingo in its foreign policy, and rather unfriendly to the United States. This mistaken view is unfortunate but not unnatural. It is unfortunate because it tends to promote discord between the two great branches of the Anglo-Saxon races and to disturb that good feeling which ought to exist and does exist between us and our English cousins. It is not unnatural. In the first place, conservative suggests reaction and resistance to progress. Disraeli and other Conservative leaders felt the unfortunate connotation of the word and always used Tory when speaking of their party. But to us Tory has an even worse connotation than Conservative. It immediately takes us back to the days of the American Revolution and of the War of 1812. We think of a Tory as a wrong-headed, pig-headed person, devoted to arbitrary government and a stupid king. In the second place, our views of British politics are much affected by the presence among us of a large number of Irish and people of Irish descent. The last thing that I wish to do is to say anything against the Irish. I am part Irish myself and very proud of it. Now the Irish in this country, a considerable section of whom came over in the years after the famine, are almost without exception Home Rulers and Nationalists. The Liberal party under Mr. Gladstone twice brought in Home Rule bills and a certain section of the Liberal party still favors Home Rule. The Conservative party has consistently stood in the past and at present stands for the Union. Very naturally, although I think most unjustly, the great majority of Irish Americans look upon the Conservative party as the enemy of Ireland. And the bulk of the American people, following the lead of their Irish fellow-citizens, have adopted this view.

In reality the Conservative party is the very opposite of what most Americans conceive it. Far from being the enemy of Ireland, it has in the last twenty years, while steadily maintaining the Union, done more to better the economic and social condition of the Irish people than the Liberal party in the whole course of its history. And in social legislation of all kinds the Tories have accomplished far more than the Liberals. The traditional Liberal policy is that of the "laissez faire" theory of political economy, and of opposition to paternalistic experiments on the part of the state. In economic matters, indeed, it is the Liberals who are the true conservatives.

In order to understand the purposes and accomplishments of the Conservative party it is necessary to consider the elements out of which it is formed. Although practical manhood franchise exists in the United Kingdom, the leaders and representatives in Parliament of both the great political parties are of the upper classes. The Liberal party from 1832 on has been controlled by members of the industrial and commercial classes. The high aristocracy after the reform of Parliament lost the political control which they had possessed for many generations. They did not regain that control until 1868, when the new Conservative party which Benjamin Disraeli had built up came into power. Disraeli's great work was the formation of a popular party under the leadership of the old territorial aristocracy, the landed interest. It was to be a party of the people and for the people but under the leadership of the "upper thousand." It was to be more progressive and more popular than the Liberal party under the control of the commercial interest could hope to be. To the new party flocked the interests which centered about the Established Church, interests which were alarmed by the strength of the non-Conformist element in the Liberal party. Disraeli was the first of British premiers to strive for a closer union of the Empire, and under his leadership the Conservative party became the Imperial party. It attracted and has retained most of that small but influential element which desires the federation of the empire.

As the Imperial party, the Tory party has always stood for the maintenance of the Union with Ireland. An empire that was divided at its head could never hope to become unified. Rather would it soon disintegrate into such a bundle of warring elements as compose the Austro-Hungarian state of to-day. But the Irish policy of the party, contrary to the general belief in this country, does not stop with the maintenance of the Union. It recognizes that Ireland in the past has been grievously misgoverned by England, that Irish industries have been systematically destroyed by English trade policies, and that the Irish peasant has been impoverished by English landlords. Various land bills were introduced in 1885, 1888, 1891, and 1903, authorizing the advance of money on very liberal terms by the state to enable tenants to purchase their holdings. The last of these, the so-called Wyndham Act of 1903, authorized the advance of £100,000,000 sterling, and the gift outright of an additional £12,000,000. How different from the common American view of a Conservative party made up of absentee Irish landlords! To encourage Irish industry, railways were built in the West, giving Irish farmers and fishermen the opportunity of sending their agricultural products and their fish to the English market. Piers and breakwaters were built for the fishermen and money advanced to them with which they might buy boats and gear. An Irish agricultural department was established in 1899, which has already done much to raise the level of Irish agriculture. Congested districts' boards were established in 1891 to deal with districts in which the holdings were too small to make a decent standard of living economically possible. Trade and agricultural schools have been founded. These measures have already given most beneficial economic results. The half-starved Ireland of former days no longer exists. The Irish people are not yet reconciled to the Union, but the intensity of feeling against it has much diminished. The Irish people to-day pay less attention to politics and more to industry than for many years, and the hope of the Conservative party of seeing at no very distant day a contented Ireland seems in fair way of fulfilment.

The greater part of the constructive social legislation of the past forty years, contrary to that prevailing American opinion which looks upon the Tories as the enemies of the working-man, has come from the Conservative party. Most of the laws relating to trades unions, factory inspection, hours of labor, employment of women and children, and workmen's lodgings have been carried by it. The Liberal leaders, many of whom are large employers of labor, have often opposed these laws. Almost the sole question of social policy on which the Conservative party has taken a backward stand is that of the taxation of unimproved land.

The foreign policy of the Tory party is generally assumed in this country to be jingo and warlike. This is a mistake. Undoubtedly as the party of empire its colonial policy is more aggressive than that of the Liberals. It seeks to enlarge the boundaries of the Empire wherever they can be enlarged without danger of war. But the Conservative party in common with sensible Englishmen of all shades of political opinion earnestly desires the continuance of peace. England has everything to lose and little to gain from war. Parts of the Empire, Canada, South Africa, Australia, are to-day sparsely settled and might be attacked with success. Every day of peace increases their defensive power. This fact alone would make the Empire, and the Conservative party as the party of empire stand for peace.

There is an incidental point in the foreign policy of both the great English parties on which every good American ought to congratulate himself. That is, the maintenance of friendly and cordial relations with the United States. Why should we not be good friends? Our blood is common, we have a common language, a common law, common traditions, and common interests.

PUBLIC EVENING SCHOOLS

BY WILLIAM O. HUBBARD

IN our system of free education, the public evening school fills a place at once important and inconspicuous. Required by law, in this State at least, for cities and towns having a population of ten thousand or more, the schools are, nevertheless, rarely heard of save by those immediately interested as pupils or as teachers. Occasionally some newspaper will speak of the development and conditions of the work ; but for the most part it is done very quietly.

And yet it is a most important work. To these schools is entrusted the making citizens of immigrants, voters of illiterates. The man who lands at East Boston one week unable to speak any language save Slavic or Italian or Scandinavian, will the next be found in the schoolroom trying to learn the new speech which is to open to him independence of position, of thought, of act within the law. Beside him is the English speaking illiterate — the man who has had no chance. He also is trying to overcome his disadvantage ; and night after night — for his desire is earnest and he does not shirk — he is struggling with the intricacies of the three R's.

And pupils of either kind make progress. I have in my possession a letter from a Greek immigrant who had been in this country three months. It is correctly phrased and spelled, and concludes with a dashing signature. There is in it even a play upon words, apropos of a souvenir postal card which he enclosed. " At sight of ancient Greek god Pan, I pray you be not taken, sir, with panic." Of course all the pupils do not make such progress in so short a time ; this man was exceptional. But what English he knew he had learned in the evening school ; and any who will work may do nearly as well. As the students do work, their rewards are in proportion.

There is probably no better example of the democracy of America than that which is seen in a night school class where such foreigners are gathered. One teacher of my acquaintance had in the room thirteen different nationalities, and there was no conflict of wills or of tone. When enough members of any one race attend to make it possible, a separate class is formed with an interpreter as teacher; but often such an arrangement cannot be made.

The work of making foreigners into American citizens is the most important service of the evening school. It brings immediate results; it carries with it the transformation of one of the most dangerous elements in our State — the illiterate and the alien — into defenders of the Commonwealth. The teachers are often asked the particulars of the naturalization laws; for most of the men mean to become citizens. The majority of the pupils are adults, with a knowledge of what they want and a sincerity in seeking it that makes it a pleasure to teach them; and as the work is done largely by objects and pictures — the books used are those prepared for the deaf and dumb — it is not difficult.

But if the work of training aliens were the only service of the schools, the State probably would not require the cities to maintain them. In addition, an opportunity is offered to all to supply defects in early schooling. Primary, grammar, high, and drawing schools are provided with a regular scheme of promotion from one to another; and how much this graduation means to those deprived of the glory of the day school exhibition, we cannot understand. From Christmas until the end of the term in March the constant demand of every pupil is, "Am I going to graduate?" and they are never contented until they find out. One girl of whom I knew could not be present on her graduation night. She was in the grammar school, and was entitled to receive only a simple printed certificate of promotion; but she came to her teacher almost in tears. "You will surely send it Friday night?" she said. "I want it to look at over Sunday" — and I verily believe that it meant as much to her as our sheepskins will mean to us. Especially are the diplomas of the high and drawing schools valued ; for they are in the regular engraved form, and signed and presented by the mayor after the usual graceful speech ; and most of the pupils have never had a graduation of their own before.

The diploma of the high school is awarded after three years' work, during which the pupil has completed six courses, chosen in as free election as those of any man in Harvard. The whole range of high school subjects is offered — Latin, French, German, history, English, mathematics, stenography, and type-writing and the rest, even to advanced sloyd. The student chooses two of these each year, the classes meeting three times a week — one period at every school session. Recitations occupy one hour, and are conducted in the same manner as in the day high schools, and often by the same teachers. Discipline is easily maintained ; any pupil who does not attend to his work is asked to leave the class. Two three-year courses in drawing — one in freehand and one in mechanical work — are required by the State, and are conducted in connection with the evening high school.

One result of the evening schools, and especially of the high school, has been to furnish a centre of social as well as intellectual life for those who lack other stimulus. There have been classes, which, organized in the high school, have continued for years as literary and social clubs, meeting as part of the school in term time, and from house to house the rest of the year. In the grammar schools also an esprit de corps such as makes this development possible is occasionally found, especially in the women's sewing classes. One such class, organized last winter, has already held several entertainments and reunions. Whether their organization will be maintained, I cannot say, but it seems probable.

In these sewing classes the members feel that they are attaining practical results, and they are therefore enthusiastic. They furnish the materials and make clothing for themselves and their families, and even learn to make and trim hats. When one of the pupils appears at school in one of her own creations, she always holds her head a trifle higher than usual, and is greeted wherever she goes by an admiring murmur. At the exhibitions, too, which occur about twice each year, applause is showered upon the members of these classes, who deal out ice cream and cake with a lavish hand and are in their glory.

In the grammar schools, besides the sewing for the girls, there are the regular graded classes and the civil service work, which has enabled many young men to pass examinations for various public offices. There is also sloyd to provide manual training for boys. The graded work is intended for those who want to learn, and those who will not study are expelled. Only in that way can good order be maintained. A sprinkling of those who come for fun, or just to go somewhere, or for the sake of being with their chums, will soon demoralize a class.

In teaching, the work is with the individual pupil rather than with the class as a whole. The rooms have the usual titles, — fourth grade, fifth, sixth, and so on; but the problem of the teacher is to give each student as much instruction as he can in the time allowed. To this end, classes are kept small, and are not so rigidly organized as in the corresponding grades of the day schools. Those who are about equally advanced at the beginning of the term are grouped together; but as they progress by application or by natural ability at different rates, there may be in a class by graduation time some who are fitted to go to the high school and some who are not ready for the fifth grade. This makes the work of the teacher more difficult, but more interesting. The course is largely a drill in fundamentals; there is little opportunity for enrichment of curriculum in a school term of six hours a week for twenty weeks.

Many of the pupils in the graded schools are eager to learn, for they realize that they may acquire knowledge that will be a help to them in their daily life. Illiterate minors are by the State law compelled to attend; but they do not make very satisfactory students. A law may drive a boy to school, but it cannot make him study.

In the varying capacity and diligence of the pupils the work finds its degrees of success and of satisfaction; but in all circumstances it is a good work — a real missionary service. It is a preaching of the gospel of education and development; and as such it is one of the most beneficent avocations a college man can have. Whether he works in the public schools or in the schools of private charity — and these do great good — he is helping to elevate the race; and in so doing, if he be a Harvard man at least, he is true to the ideals of his alma mater.

THE ITALIAN IN AMERICA

BY JOHN DE RAISMES STOREY

ONE of the strongest of our national prejudices is that which we entertain against the Italian immigrant. It is not due so much to the natural misunderstanding of an alien race, as to the conditions which attended the Italian's arrival in America. The newcomer was obliged to take up the less skilful forms of labor, but was so industrious that he quickly incurred the enmity of those who had formerly done our rougher work. From the defeated competitor we learned that the Italian was a dangerous character, that he was not honest, that he was stupid, and that he lowered our standard of living. As we are a democratic nation, this prejudice spread very rapidly through all our ranks, till finally it has become part of our national attitude.

Though if one were to try, it might be possible to find some evidence to support this prejudice, it would be more profitable to consider the value of the contribution the Italian will make to our future national life. In doing this we should bear in mind that, perhaps, circumstances have militated against the Italian and made his struggle unduly hard.

The Italian, as a rule, comes to us very poor. He must, therefore, get work at once; that is to say in or near the great seaports where he lands. Also he does not know our language, and so he must rely on some compatriot, who only too often is a labor contractor, whose interest it is to keep him at work in the cities or on the larger contracts.

These two facts, particularly the latter, are largely responsible for many of the faults the Italian immigrant presents to us. Amongst others for his concentrating in the cities. There are about 800,000 Italians in the United States; of these nearly 400,000 live in Greater New York. One must admit this to be a great evil, as it tends to limit the usefulness and sap the vitality of the race. Yet city life has not done the Italian as much harm as might be imagined. For coming from the country, as he most often does, he has adopted the more open-air occupations, even in our large cities. In his amusements also he still retains much of this country spirit.

This is not, however, the only good sign. So many of these Italians being country-folk, and skilled only in cultivating the soil, they are gradually seizing the opportunities offered them to settle in the country, and to take up work they are much fonder of. Already there are about 50,000 Italians in California, almost all of whom are employed in agriculture, owning 2700 farms. This exodus is indeed a little delayed by the Italian tendency to clannishness, for which we cannot blame him, when we consider how generally he is without cause distrusted and disliked.

Those of us who have lived with the Italian in his own country, and know his many lovable qualities, feel almost bitter when we see him so grossly misunderstood. Perhaps, however, this is because the American people have not yet learned to know him; for already his employers, and others who have come in contact with him praise his industry, his eagerness to please and also his intelligence. In Mississippi, for instance, in the cotton lands there is a most successful Italian settlement. The workers have proved themselves, at an unaccustomed task, five times as productive as the negro. I have been told, also, that the Italian laborer will often do extra work without extra pay,—a refreshing bit of news in these days of hammers dropped in midair at the sound of the five-o'clock whistle.

Though they have only been coming in great numbers within the last twenty years, the Italians are fast proving themselves by their success worthy of our confidence. Already many of them are to be found in the higher ranks of labor and in the professions. At first they came but to return to Italy in a few years, though only after giving us good work in exchange for their wages. But now, statistics show that they are more and more looking to America as their new home, where they have greater opportunities than they ever had in their own fatherland. As an instance of this intention, it might be mentioned that the holdings of Italians in New York City real estate amount already to $17,000,000. Furthermore, it is not the riff-raff that is coming over here; for Italy is beginning to look with interest in the work of her children in America, and the Italian government is heartily co-operating with ours in enforcing as far as it can our immigration laws.

In another direction, however, the Italian will perhaps have a much more important part to play. The vast numbers of immigrants of different races that are constantly pouring into our land often make one wonder what the future American will be like, what will be his manner of life, what will be his ideals. Most probably the American type will always remain in its main traits very much as it is now. But so large a part of a nation cannot fail to have a modifying influence on the whole. It is here that the Italian will repay us richly for what our land has done for him.

Once we get to know the Italian as he really is, we shall find how undeserved our distrust of him was, and in an atmosphere of mutual esteem he will exert a strong influence over our people. Up to now the Italian has returned our distrust by assuming an attitude of sullen reserve. But gradually this is passing off. Strong, young nation as we are, we are apt to forget there are other things besides "getting there" that count. Even in our pleasures we are constantly mistaking the means for the end, and thus needlessly multiplying our activities. The happy, good-natured Italian, belonging to a race the equal of our own, will do much to allay this feverish struggle.

Our people will learn from him, perhaps, the secret of simple pleasures — love of music, of flowers, of art. He will endow our future race with some of the so-called minor talents, of which he possesses so liberal a share, and which help so much to make our lives brighter and happier. In general he will help to broaden our sterner and more vigorous ideals by adding an element of a softer yet truer beauty.
